

CURRICULUM VITAE

APPOINTMENT: Curator and Professor of Entomology (50% time).

TRAINING: Ph.D. - University of California, Berkeley, 1983; major professor John T. Doyen.

B.A. - University of Wisconsin, 1972; advisor John J. Magnuson.

RESEARCH (30%):

(1) Systematic revision of Cyphocoleus beetles of New Caledonia. Based on substantial high-quality taxonomic material collected by Dr. Geoff Monteith, Queensland Museum, I have revised the 22 species of Cyphocoleus—12 newly described—placing them phylogenetically within the carabid tribe Odacanthini. Cyphocoleus belong to a newly proposed subtribe that exhibits an amphiantarctic biogeographic pattern, supporting the presence of Cyphocoleus in New Caledonia since Late Cretaceous.

(2) Phylogenetics of the tribe Moriomorhini. This long-term project addresses the overall phylogenetic relationships among genera of the carabid tribe Moriomorhini, an Austral taxon distributed from Australia across the Pacific to Chile. My current project entails revision of the New Caledonian Mecyclothorax beetles, while putting them in phylogenetic context with other Mecyclothorax clades from New Zealand and Australia.

(3) Revisionary systematics of native Hawaiian and Tahitian Carabidae. The native Hawaiian carabid beetle fauna comprises about 420 species. I have revised species in three independent radiations; the endemic genus Blackburnia (133 extant plus 7 extinct species), the Austral-Pacific genus Mecyclothorax (239 Hawaiian species), and worldwide genus Bembidion (23 native Hawaiian species). In complementary studies I revised the 116 Mecyclothorax species endemic to Haleakala, East Maui, a volcano of area ~1450 km², and the 101 endemic Mecyclothorax species from Tahiti; area 1045 km². These island radiations comprise two of most diverse, most geographically restricted radiations on earth, with species distributions defining extremely restricted areas of endemism that are the focus of ongoing conservation efforts. Patterns of character evolution among most-closely related species shed light on morphological changes associated with speciation, and biogeographic patterns of closely related cryptic species point to how allopatric speciation proceeds across these two hyperdiverse radiations. Both radiations stem from Pleistocene colonization of the islands by the ancestors of a widespread Australian tramp species, M. punctipennis.

TEACHING (15%): Maggots, Grubs and Cutworms: Larval Insect Biology (3 cr. w/ lab, ENTOM 3330, spring of 2018, 2020).

CURATION (5%): I am responsible for overall administration of the Cornell University Insect Collection, its development, and enhancement. The CUIC is the largest insect collection housed by a land-grant institution, comprising nearly 7,000,000 specimens that include insects from all biogeographic regions. We are currently operating under a Collections in Support of Biological Research grant from the National Science Foundation.
